Foreword

BY THE VICE-CHANCELLOR

IN the following list will be found the names of many members of the University who have made the Army their profession and have for a longer or shorter time ceased to reside in Oxford. But the largest number of names is of those Graduates and Undergraduates who have broken off their civilian career under the stress of national peril and have come forward as soldiers in answer to the appeal of the Government. The University and the Colleges do not forget those who have finished their career here, and left us for the Army. Their names are traced in Army Lists, Lists of Honours, and of Casualties : the work of compiling the list has, in many cases, renewed the link between Colleges and their former members. But for those who are in residence now, the most impressive part of the list is that of the names of men who were here a year ago, who meant to be back again last October, and who have felt the higher call and subordinated their own immediate interests to the Country's need. The lack of them makes Oxford, even in the Summer Term, a rather desolate and desert place. They come from all classes in the State and from all Colleges. Every Society in Oxford has given of its best—in learning, in athletics, in social gifts ; and all the varieties of Oxford men—Commoners, Exhibitioners, Scholars, Fellows—will be found among them.

To one who has watched the growth since last August of this academic contribution to His Majesty's Army, it has a peculiar interest. It is largely a civilian army. The great majority of those who offered themselves had no previous intention of joining the Army. Some were already in other professions, especially that of the Schoolmaster. Others had chosen their academic course with a view of preparing for Law or Medicine or the Civil Services or Holy Orders. Many hope to return to their former pursuits when the war is over.

They form part, in fact, of a civilian army, and they are representative, to a new and high degree, of the nation as a whole. It is constantly said that there are many still who hold back selfishly from the service of their country: there are few indeed, if any, of these in the University. Our men have come forward readily and deliberately, and they represent the true feeling of the nation. The nation has risen, tentatively at first, and as it were by instinct rather than a fully reasoned decision, to fight for freedom and civilization against a more than ordinarily distasteful presentation of their opposites. Every day of the war justifies and confirms its action.

May God preserve our Oxford soldiers and bring them home with victory and peace.

THOMAS B. STRONG,

Vice-Chancellor.

CHRIST CHURCH,

Editor's Note

THE Oxford Roll of Service includes members of our Army and Navy, of the Armed Forces of our Allies, and of various Ambulance units, and contains the names of certain others who have given up their ordinary avocations to undertake duties in connexion with the war. It does not, however, record the voluntary services of many old members of the University who, although prevented by one cause or another from joining the regular forces of the Crown, are yet giving valuable service as Special Constables or in the Volunteer Training Corps, nor does it include members of Officers' Training Corps unless they hold Commissions.

This book is then a record of personal service, but it may perhaps be worth pointing out that the part played by the University in the war has not been limited merely to the supply of men ; she has also given freely of her hospitality and has placed many of her buildings at the disposal of the War Office. The Examination Schools are completely taken over by the 3rd Southern General Hospital, which has overflowed into various City buildings and has recently annexed Somerville College, one of the Societies for Women Students.

Some half-dozen of the Colleges have more or less continuously housed officers and men of the various local units, Territorial and New Army, Artillery and Yeomanry, and many others have been used temporarily for this purpose or similar ones.

A striking feature of recent years has been the growth of the influence of the Officers' Training Corps upon University life, one result of which was shown by the quite considerable number of undergraduates, qualified for immediate service as officers, who became available on the outbreak of war. The War Office has made use of what is left of the Staff of the Corps in training successive batches of young officers, sent to Oxford in drafts of 200, for service in the New Armies. Not less than 1,400 such officers have been through these courses, and here again many Colleges have assisted by housing drafts and providing lecture rooms. The work that has fallen upon the Officers of the O.T.C. may be estimated when it is remembered that during the whole of this time the ordinary training of the University Corps has been carried on, about 850 men having been trained since October, of whom over 500 have by now been recommended for Commissions. Since last August too the Colonel and Adjutant have sat with the Vice-Chancellor on a Committee for selecting candidates for Commissions, and they must have interviewed over 2,000 men.

The preparation of a Roll of Service would have been impossible but for the co-operation of those members of the staffs of the Colleges who undertook the compilation of the lists for their own Societies. They have usually been busy men with many other duties, but they have spared neither time nor trouble in their voluntary task. I gladly take this opportunity of expressing my indebtedness to them, to the Vice-Chancellor, now as ever ready with help and encouragement, to the assistants in my own office, three of whom have themselves undertaken military service, and to all who have directly and indirectly assisted in the production of this record.

In conclusion may I express an earnest hope that Oxford men, and all who are interested in the University, will help us by supplying any information they can which will assist in making the Oxford Roll of Service a complete record of the part played by the University in this greatest war of all time. Such information should be addressed to the ' Compiler of the Service Roll ' at the College concerned, or to the Assistant Registrar of the University.
